The Dallas Cowboys and the Washington Football Team will face off in an NFC East clash at 4:30 p.m. ET Nov. 26 at AT&T Stadium. Dallas will be hoping to continue their now three-game streak of scoring more points each contest than the last.

After constant struggles on the road, the Cowboys have finally found some success away from home. They had just enough and edged out the Minnesota Vikings 31-28. Dallas can attribute much of their success to RB Ezekiel Elliott, who picked up 103 yards on the ground on 21 carries in addition to snatching one receiving TD. That nimble footwork stands out as the first time Elliott has hit the 100-yard rushing mark this season.

Need a bit of relaxation after your Thanksgiving meal? The Dallas Cowboys host the Washington Football Team on FOX!

Who would have thought that a matchup between two 3-7 teams would have playoff implications? The NFC East is... well, a nightmare, but like it or not they're sending a team to the playoffs. In a bit of good news, both teams enter today's game on one-game winning streaks, with Washington and Dallas picking up Week 11 victories over the Bengals and Vikings, respectively. Which team will make it two in a row? Let's find out!

Following the first game of the day between the Houston Texans and Detroit Lions, the Dallas Cowboys and Washington Football Team will close out the NFL's Thanksgiving slate with a matchup at AT&T Stadium. The third planned matchup for the day between the Pittsburgh Steelers and Baltimore Ravens was postponed until Sunday due to a number of positive COVID-19 tests.

It's a critical game between the two divisional opponents, as despite their poor records, both Washington and the Cowboys remain in the thick of NFC East race. Washington (3-7) and Dallas (3-7) currently are only percentage points behind the Philadelphia Eagles (3-6-1) for the best record in the division. Kickoff is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. (Pacific).
